
ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This book, like the ID Trail project itself, owes its existence to significant funding and other equally important forms of support from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council and a number of private and public sector partners, including the Alberta Civil Liberties Association Research Centre, Bell University Labs, the British Columbia Civil Liberties Association, Canadian Internet Policy and Public Interest Clinic, Centre on Values and Ethics, the Department of Justice, Entrust Technologies, Electronic Privacy Information Center, IBM Canada Ltd., Management Board Secretariat Ontario, Microsoft, the Office of the Information and Privacy Commission of Ontario, the Office of the Privacy Commissioner of Canada, the Ontario Research Network in Electronic Commerce, Privacy International, and the Sheldon Chumir Foundation for Leadership in Ethics. We are thankful for the support provided and could not have produced this volume or any of our other key research outcomes without the help of these organizations.

As a project that has sought to mobilize key research outputs in accessible language and across a variety of venues in order to assist policymakers and the broader public, we have worked closely with Canada's Federal and Provincial Information and Privacy Commissioners. We thank them for their invaluable time, effort, and contributions to our work and for their general interest and support. Thanks also to Stephanie Perrin, a longtime member of Canada's privacy advocacy community, for her role in putting us on the map during the early years of the project.

A number of universities and groups have collaborated with us on this book. In particular, we would like to show appreciation to Giusella Finocchiaro and the Università di Bologna, as well as Bert-Jaap Koops, Ronald Leenes, and members of the Tilburg Institute for Law, Technology, and Society for wonderful and animating discussions on the topics we all treasure so dearly. As our base of operations, the University of Ottawa has been central to everything we have accomplished. Special thanks are due to Gilles Morier and Daniel Lefebvre for their superb and supererogatory efforts in helping us run the show, and to Common Law Dean Bruce Feldthusen, for always saying, "How can I help make it happen?" With more than a hundred undergraduate, graduate, and postgraduate students working with the project over a four-year period, it is not possible to thank each by name. There are two, however, whose extraordinary involvement at the outset of the project made it possible for all of the others to participate. Our heartfelt appreciation goes to Milana Homsy and Nur Muhammed-Ally for getting the ball rolling. Similar thanks is owed to Francine Guenette, our first project administrator, for paving the road to success. Your special efforts were deeply valued.

xiv ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Finding harmony among so many different voices while preserving the distinctness of each is no small task. To Amanda Leslie, our über-talented, lightning-quick, and highly reliable copyeditor, we feel privileged to have had the opportunity to work with you on this project. Thanks also to our acquisitions editor, Chris Collins, the ever-helpful Isel Pizarro, and to Jaimee Biggins and all members of the production team at Oxford University Press who have helped improve the quality of this book. We are also grateful to thirty or so anonymous reviewers for their effort and good judgment, upon which we greatly relied.

Finally, our deepest and everlasting gratitude is owed to Julia Ladouceur, our project administrator, whose playful smile and gentle manner belie her stunning ability to do just about anything. Always with kindness, always with generosity, and always with a bedazzling perfection that somehow renders invisible any remnant or recollection of the fact that the world was never that way on its own.
